Jewish Hostage Slain in Beirut; Talks Faltering

BEIRUT - The body of a kidnapped Lebanese Jew has been François Mitterrand, currently on found in West Beirut as efforts to gain the release of American and French hostages appeared to falter. Police said Wednesday that the body of Chaim Cohen Halala was found Tuesday a few hours after a militant Moslem group claimed that it had killed him. A spokesman said Mr. Halala's body was found near a church in Beirut's Riad Solh commercial district. Mr. Halala, 39, had been shot three times, he said.

Meanwhile, negotiators working for the release of foreign hostages left Beirut this week,

Terry Waite, the special envoy of the archbishop of Canterbury, returned to London on Tuesday and said that there could soon be major developments in his efforts to free four American hostages.

"We're at a point where we can move forward creatively quite quickly or, as is often the case in Lebanon, we could really run into major difficulties, very severe difficulties," Mr. Waite said.

Before leaving Beirut, Mr. Waite acknowledged that the kidnappers, from the extremist Islamic Jihad, were still demanding the release of 17 persons convicted in Kuwait for bombing the U.S. and French embassies in 1983.

Mr. Waite, on his third journey to Beirut since four American hostages wrote to Archbishop Robert Runcie last month asking for help in gaining their freedom, said that he had not seen the hostages.

An-Nahar reported Wednesday that kidnappers of four French hostages had offered to trade them for five men serving jail terms in France for attempting to assassi-nate former Prime Minister Sha-pour Bakhtiar of Iran.

An-Nahar said Islamic Jihad made the offer during a visit to Beirut by a Lebanese-born French mediator, Dr. Razah Raad, who main demand was that President vacation in Egypt, free the prison-ers before the end of the year.

In the eastern Lebanese city of Zahle, the city's Maronite Catholic bishop, Georges Iskandar, was injured on Tuesday when he fought off gummen who tried to kidnap him, police reported.

The police said the gunmen tried to drag the bishop into a car, but he fought them. After pistol-whipping him, the gunmen fled.

Mr. Halala was kidnapped on March 29 from his home in West Beirut's old Jewish quarter of Wadi Abu Jamil, now inhabited mostly

A group calling itself the Organi zation of the Oppressed on Earth claimed in a statement published Tuesday by the An-Nahar independent newspaper that it had killed Mr. Halala.

The typewritten statement said he was killed in retaliation for the shelling of Shiite Moslem villages in south Lebanon by Israeli-backed militia gunners of the mainly Chris-tian South Lebanon Army.

■ Militias Said to Agree

Reuters reported from Damas cus that rival Lebanese militias agreed Wednesday on a plan aimed at ending their 10-year civil war.

A source close to the militias said the accord was expected to be signed this weekend.

The source said that representatives of Lebanon's Shiite Amal movement, the mainly Druze Pro-gressive Socialist Party and the Christian Lebanese Forces had advised Vice President Abdel-Halim Khaddam of Syria of their agreement before they left for Beirut on Vednesday evening

The source said the agreement covered all points under discussion "but militias still have to choose the prime minister who will implement

U.S. Calls Resettlement In Ethiopia a 'Tragedy'

By Clyde H. Farnsworth New York Times Service WASHINGTON - The top American foreign aid official has said the United States had accounts from witnesses of shocking conditions in two resettlement villages in Gojjam Province in western Ethiopia, suggesting "a vast hu-man tragedy of historical proportions."

M. Peter McPherson, administrator of the Agency for International Development, reported that since March "hundreds have al-ready died" in the villages in the swampy Pawe area, about 150 miles (240 kilometers) northwest of Addis Ababa. Death was due mainly to malaria, typhus and other diseases, he said. The two villages, designated. Pawe 5 and Pawe 7, have a total population of 1,000. Mr. McPherson said Monday the information came from American government personnel on the scene who speak the local language and had interviewed the villagers. The villagers had been forced, "often at gunpoint," into the Pawe area from provinces in the arid northeast, Mr. McPherson said. He added that the villagers were now barred from leaving. He said the Reagan administration was making a public disclosure of the situation because it was symptomatic of a much broader problem --- what he called the "human tragedy" associated with forced resettlement of hundreds of thousands of people in Ethiopia, which was been ravaged by famine.

"The problem is that we don't know where the other Pawes are located," he said. "Neither the press nor relief workers have free where people are dying unbeknownst to the world." He said the disclosures would not cause any change in American policy on food aid. The United States supplied about one-third of Ethiopia's food needs this year and is committed to contributing the same amount next year, he said. More than 500,000 people have been moved in recent months from the arid northeast to more fertile areas in the southern and western parts of the country. The Ethiopian government is planning to resettle almost three times that many people as part of its effort to prevent future food shortages. In some of the northeastern provinces such as Tigre and Wello.

Last month the French private relief organization Doctors Without Borders sharply criticized the resettlement program and said as many as 100,000 people have died in the operation. The Ethiopian government expelled the relief organization this month.

Mr. McPherson did n. discuss these accusations and conuned his criticism to the conditions he said had been revealed by the witnesses.

Several telephone calls were made to Abebe Beyene, first secretary of the Ethiopian Embassy, to obtain his reaction. He declined to return the calls. Mr. McPherson said the situation in the two Pawe villages "has been brought to the attention of the Ethiopian government."

He added, "We have reason to

An Outsider Issues a State-of-the-Art Challenge to Fleet Street

By Joseph Lelyveld

New York Times Service

LONDON — Eddie Shah works from an office about three miles from Fleet Street, the natural habitat of English newspapers.

He has never set foot in a Fleet Street newspaper, he says, and has never laid eyes on a Linotype machine the outmoded hot-metal printing machine still in use on every national newspaper in Britain because of the inflexible resistance of most labor unions to the introduction of new technology.

Yet, in a period of upheaval on Fleet Street, Mr. Shah's name comes up quickly in any conversation on the future of the industry in a nation that remains ravenous, despite television, for printed news and opinion, printed gossip and — in the popular tabloids — printed photos of bare-breasted women.

Mr. Shah, 41, broke into the business in the provinces as the publisher of a string of giveaway papers. He may not be of the Fleet Street world, but he is the vanguard of the technological revolution that is finally

Ten weeks from now, on March 4 or 5 according to present plans, the first editions of his new national tabloid called Today will roll off the presses at four satellite printing plants around England.

Aimed at youthful and upwardly mobile middle-class readers and produced from what was designed to be a state-of-the-art newsroom, it will be the first national daily in Britain to have dispensed entirely with Linotype machines and the trade unions whose members operated them.

Mr. Shah's Today will not only start with the technology, in common use in North America and much of continental Europe for more than a decade, that enables editors to set type by pushing a button on a video terminal. But it also aims to be one of the first major papers anywhere to dispense with cut-and-paste layout operations; like the editing the design and makeup of its pages will be handled on display

In addition, it will be the first British daily capable of producing and transmitting color pages from its own plant, using the latest computerized equipment.

Starting from scratch with a reported $30 million from outside investors and a staff of only 500 — compared with 6,500 on the slumping Mirror — Mr. Shah has run a detour around the union battles that much less ambitious efforts at technological innovation have provoked on Fleet Street.

He won a major confrontation two years ago with the printers union, which placed his provincial papers under siege to force him to maintain a closed shop. He insists he is not anti-mion — Today has signed an agreement with the electricians union — but he rules out closed shops.

Unless his editorial product is a complete failure, Mr. Shah is likely to turn a larger profit in his first year than the whole of Fleet Street combined.

Last year, he pointed out in an interview, Britain's nine national dailies and eight Sunday papers had total revenues of close to $2 billion and total profits of scarcely $15 million; this year, he said, there probably would be higher revenues but a net loss.

If Mr. Shah proves that it is possible to break into the national competition from outside Fleet Street, he will inevitably have imitators. That prospect, plus the losses that some of the old mainstays are now suffering, lies behind the industry's current turmoil.

Control of three of the six highest circulation dailies

— The Mirror, the Daily Express and the Daily Telegraph — has changed hands in just over a year.
The three papers together sell more than six million copies daily, but each is losing money, mainly, their owners contend, because of overstaffing.

Mr. Shah's challenge to Fleet Street — symbolized by his decision to situate his paper at the other end of town, near the West End in Pimlico not far from the Tate Gallery — will go beyond technology.

A hulking figure who looks like a retired football inebacker going to fat, he means to be a new kind of publisher producing what will be, for Britain, a new

Over the last year, the Congress has built up a remarkable respect-ability among South African whites: leading businessmen and newspaper editors have made the pilgrimage to Zambia to meet with its leaders; churchmen and Afrikaner students, too, have sought to follow the same route, and its own sense of unprecedented influence over South Africa's future has burgeoned in direct proportion to the continued protest of the nation's segregated black townships.

Increasingly, the Congress has een cast as the principal combatant in the war against the white authorities, and the bomb blast Monday hardened the lines. Many South African commentators believe, however, that the result will not be a weakening of Afrikaner resolve, but a strengthening of it that will prolong the nation's crisis.

Justice John P. Winnie Mandela's 'Crime'

To appreciate the bullying nature of the South African government and its mindless resort to coercion, you have first to understand the "crime" committed by Winnie Mandela: She went home. That's it. Mrs. Mandela, wife of the long-imprisoned leader of the African National Congress, Nelson Mandela, and a strong leader in her own right, spent years under an oppressive banning order, combining internal exile and severe restrictions on her daily activity, which she defied in a variety of small ways. Recently, the South African government, in what it seemed to regard as an act of great generosity, eased the terms of the order that had required her to live in remote Brandfort in the Orange Free State, but enjoined her from living in her home in the Black township of Soweto near Johannesburg. Twice she went there and twice she was routed by police, who came into her house, pushed her around and dragged her from the premises.

We stress the simple and profoundly nonviolent character of this so-called "crime," not just to point out the disproportion between what Mrs. Mandela did and the reaction of the security forces, although that will surely strike people here as yet further evidence of the brutishness of the South African government, We stress it also because it so clearly reveals how untenable and self-destructive is the course that government has chosen,

To an American visitor or even an American onlooker from abroad, it often seems incomprehensible that there has been so relatively little peaceful protest or resistance by blacks and their white sympathizers in South Africa. Why do so many people simply walk through the prescribed doors and submit to the painful, rigorous separations, indignities and inhibi-tions of apartheid? Where are the sit-ins and other familiar forms of civil disobedience? The answer has been that the white government's reaction to such gestures when they were ondertaken - opening fire on peaceful resisters - long since discouraged such action. The only recourse, it would then be argued, was the violent clandestine attack, the growing guerrilla enterprise, responding gunfire. We have surely seen more of the latter activities in recent months. Yet nothing has had the power, emotional and moral, in our view, of the expulsion of Mrs. Mandela from her own home and her determination not to submit to the tyranny of the government. Her resistance shows, first, just how electrifying such an organized peaceful resistance could be. And it shows, second, how pitiful and doomed and evil is the apartheid fantasy the government seeks to impose and maintain: Grown men running around threatening physical punishment for those who merely go to the wrong (i.e., forbidden) place at the wrong time or, under the terms of various banning orders, say the wrong thing to the wrong number or kind of people on the wrong occasion. What fear they must live in! How preposterous the "security" they have fashioned for themselves! It depends on a whole nation's accepting their elaborate protocols of who may be where when and what may be said when they get there.

Winnie Mandela's defiance is her dignity.

The guys with guns secured the house. But theirs was an empty victory. By its act the South African government revealed not its strength, but its fear and weakness.

Statesmen, philosophers, theologians and lawyers have been grappling for centuries with the problem of the rules of war. From St. Augustine's formulations of the just war, through the age of chivalry down to the Nuremberg tribunals and to the present day considerations in The Hague, there have been numerous attempts to control the way in which armed combat is conducted. The debate on the rules of military intervention in particular goes back two centuries. In 1758 Emmerich de Vattel published his seminal work, country may answer the request of a beleaguered government that is fighting an insurgency. For example, it is within the right of the Salvadoran government to request American help to fight the guerrilla rebellion. Extrapolated from this is an argument sometimes deployed that the United States is justified in aiding the "contras" because this is a way of undermining the Nicaraguan support for the insurgency in El Salvador.

Lenoring the World Court and some 200 years of evolving international law is the way of small town politicos, not national statesmen.

causus bellum. Each nation has the right to its own independent integrity unless it itself breaks the rules by attacking another. Conversely, as the UN Charter makes explicit, the only just cause for going to war is self-defense. Yet although this is written into the UN Charter and into the charter of the Organization of Ameri-can States it has never been tested in a court of law before.

So now that it is being put to the judicial test are there any mitigating arguments that the World Court could take into consideration?

It is widely recognized that when s cavil war or insurgency has produced such a degree of chaos that law and order have broken down, outsiders have the right to enter and rescue their nationals. But this does not apply in the Nicaragnan case. Less recognized, but nevertheless widely supported, is the view that a

However, this would stand up better if the forces the United States is supporting against the Nicaraguan government were primarily those of El Salvador's government.

The rulers of El Salvador have never shown any interest in turning their guns on Nicaragua. This is not simply cowardice or even expediency. The fact is that the United States has never been able to prove convincingly that the Nicaraguan help to the Salvadoran rebels has been anything more than a trickle.

A third argument, following from the above, is that once a country aids another to help to defeat the rebels then the insurgents also have the right to ask for outside help. Would this let the Reagan administration off the World Court hook? After all, perhaps the Nicaraguans did seek Soviet and Cuban support to put down the resistance before the contras received outside help from the United States. But this will require looking into under a microscope. Moreover, Nicaragua will say Cuban and Soviet military support received both before and since the contra activity is more in the nature of general aid than direct but not for lack of national concern.

That is the real point. The Soviet Union exists, will not go away and cannot be ignored. Therefore Amenca must deal with it. The appropriate question is: On what terms?

The issue of sincerity is irrelevant. There is a mirror image of fear, distrust, suspicion on both sides, and the nature of the world's present circumstances will not dissipate it, although perhaps it can be eased a little. Amer-icans are convinced that the United States arms itself only for defense and never uses force except on provo-cation and with high moral justifica-tion. The Soviets think the opposite.

These are perceptions. They cannot be proven. Argument will not transform them; invoking good will cannot remove them. There are some fundamental U.S. and Soviet interests in conflict, and so long as that is true the two will be adversaries.

But there are also some fundame tal U.S. and Soviet interests which converge. Managing the two countries relations means finding ways to identify them, and then devising nuclear war but also conventional war with its high risk of escalation.

Another is to prevent fights among third countries and upbeavals within them from luring superpowers into direct confrontation. This is more difficult and riskier because the line to be drawn is less clear and each side's view of its own interests and obligations is less sharply defined. As John Stremlau of the Rockefeller Foundation has put it, "In con-trast to the rest of the world, both we

In the long term, all international agreements depend for their fulfill-whether the compacts are observed.

counterinsurgency support.
This may well be the court's debating point, not Vattel's standards of oppression and justice, nor modern concepts of the relative worth of democracy and dictatorship. This literal rendering of international law bothers some democratically minded scholars and lawyers. One international lawyer, Lloyd Cutler, legal counsel to Jimmy Carter, the former president, argues that outside intervention should be allowed if the insurgency is manifestly pro-demo-cratic fighting a totalitarian regime and the repressive government itself is receiving aid from outside, even if it is only general support not engaged directly against the rebels.

Yet even if this were accepted U.S. support for the contras could hardly be justified since the democratic credentials of the contras are, to say the least, confused. The justices of the World Court, drawn from the wide ideological membership of the United Nations, will not give this argument the time of day.

Mankind can only live tolerably if there is law. This we usually accept at home, in our own countries. It is the duty of political leaders to tell us that this is the only way to build a civilized planet. Ignoring the World Court and 200 years of evolving international law is the way of small town politicos, not national statesmen.

For Sanity's Sake, Tax Oil

the fourth consecutive year, desperately needs to reorder its finances. Congress knows that and so does the president: They've just committed themselves by law to cut the deficit $55 billion next year and eliminate it entirely by 1991. Now the opportunity to take a long stride toward that goal is enhanced by the collapse of the Organization of Petroleum Ex-porting Countries, the oil cartel. The way to do it is to tax imported oil.

Doing so in this time of declining prices would raise huge sums for the Treasury without triggering inflation or causing hardship. Hardly anyone would feel the pinch. Gasoline and heating oil prices now reflect an average cost of about $28 a barrel of crude.

If the collapse of OPEC cuts the price to $20, as is now anticipated, an $8 fee on each imported barrel would have the effect of paying the United States what it has been paying to foreign oil producers. The treasury would be enriched by $30 billion — $15 billion directly from the import tax and another $15 billion in income and windfall taxes on domestic oil.

An import fee offers additional benefits. Most taxes, even if necessary for revenue, are wasteful because they drive a wedge between real costs and prices, discouraging effort and reducing demand. But an oil import fee would actually improve efficiency, forcing consumers to absorb the hidden costs of dependence on unstable foreign supplies.

Those hidden costs can be enormous. The first oil shock in 1973-74 sent the world into a recession that reduced output by a trillion dollars. Another shock might be easier to absorb but it would still be costly. At the least, oil consumers should pay the true cost of the

America, running a $200 billion deficit for product, which includes the billions spent on military preparations to defend foreign oil fields and shipping lanes.

A further benefit is that consumers alone would not pay the entire $8 import fee; a portion would be paid by foreign oil producers. The higher the price, the lower the demand for oil and gasoline. And the lower the demand, the lower the world price for crude. Some of the income of foreign oil exporters would thus be transferred to importers; Sena-tor Gary Hart, a Democrat of Colorado, estimates that about one-third of an import fee would, in effect, be rebated to consumers.

Irresponsibly. Americans have refused through all the wrenching years of high oil prices to use an oil tax to retain some revenue for themselves. Politicians fear the public would revile any plan to tax oil at home rather than enrich Arabs abroad. But in a time of falling prices, there's every reason to believe that oil-producing states like Texas would sup-port an import fee. The fee, after all, would increase demand for domestic oil, which in turn would create jobs and revenues.

Yes, President Reagan so opposes any new taxes that he would veto even this sensible one. But, as will soon be clear, federal spending cuts alone will not suffice to reduce the deficit on the schedule required by law. Even Mr. Reagan may prefer some taxes to gutting his military buildup. And he would not be wrong in contending that an oil import fee is less a tax than a charge on the use of a public resource The president favors user charges in other pressure in the light of day.

The point of principle has to do with oldoned values like honor, dignity and integr ty. And the implications run far beyond the potential of runing reputations and careers by putting them at the risk of a notoriously unreliable piece of machinery. The implications fields. Why, then, reject charges on oil imports that create military obligations and threaten the security of the United States? go to the mind-set of the president and of - THE NEW YORK TIMES. those who pressed the polygraph upon him as an instrument of government.

What the president would have if he could is a sweeping expansion of a practice earlier administrations routinely employed for strictly limited purposes, to control the security of a narrow range of sensitive intelligence operations. Those who have enlisted in that business surrendered more than a few of the rights of expression and freedom enjoyed by other government workers.

Even the president's efforts to meet most of Mr. Shultz's objections (polygraph examinations will now be confined to use "in conjunction with other investigations and security procedures in espionage cases") are scarcely reassning unless you know what is meant by "espionage." The espionage laws, dating back to 1917, are loose enough to have allowed the Nixon administration to use them to win an indictment against Daniel Elisburg for purloining and distributing the Pentagou Papers in 1971.

The Reagan administration apparently reads them the same way, having successfully prosecut-ed Samuel Morison, a Naval Intelligence analyst, ed Sammel Morison, a Naval Intelligence analyst, for espionage in a case involving the leak of classified photos of Soviet aircraft carriers to a British publication in 1984.

We are talking, then, about plugging leaks, not necessarily by master spies, and not necessarily to enemy agents. The Reagan administration, that is to say, is in the same "plumbing" business as was the Nixon administration, if not on the same scale or by the same criminal means. But it is acting out of the same overwought sense of insecurity, Mr. Reagan was apparently expedient is acting out or the same overwrought sense or insecurity. Mr. Reagan was apparently egged on by his director of central intelligence, William Casey, and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinber-ger, who both seem to believe that polygraph tests are so good for their own employees that they should be good for everybody. The administration has good reason to be alarmed by the recent spate of espionage cases. Clearly they call for a tightening of security. But in almost every instance, conventional tech-niques and standard practice have been revealed to be astonishingly lax. And in at least one case, involving a Chinese agent who involving a Chinese agent who apparently worked from within the CIA for 30 years and was undetected by polygraph testing, the technical

But the case for their use on the scale that the president apparently had in mind collapsed com-pletely under the weight of Mr. Shultz's princi-pled arguments. I would ask you to let your imagination run. Picture some past American policy-making figures — Henry Stimpson, George Marshall, Dean Acheson, Dean Rusk, Henry Kissinger or Clark Clifford - strapped into a polygraph, with wires or other devices measuring their pulse, their respiration and the sweatiness of their palms. Is that the image you cherish of those who guide your destinies at the ghest level?

We know what we would think if that were the stated policy of the Soviet Union. What would we think of the British government of Margaret Thatcher or that of President François Mitter-rand of France, as reliable allies, if they started wiring their cabinet ministers to lie detectors to what, accordingly, would they be supposed to think of a leader of the free world who did so?

The Ban on Satellite Killers

President Reagan said after his Geneva meeting with Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the Soviet leader, that the summit should be judged not by today's words but by tomorrow's deeds. The vote by Congress to stop further testing of satellite-killing weapons until and unless the Soviet Union resumes tests of its own was a deed that takes Mr. Reagan at his word.

Satellite killers are the ideal pieces of hardware for experimenting with a concept of arms control by mutual restraint. It is an idea that attracts many defense analysts.

The weapons, known as ASATs, are ideal, first, because nobody needs them. If being able to shoot out an enemy's satellite had any value in a crisis, it would be very slight, far outweighed by the dangers of panicking one side into firing in all directions if some satellites were destroyed by accident.

Stopping tests while the only such weapons in existence are an American system only slightly less crude than a similar Soviet system awakened from sleep last night [Dec. 24] by old-time minstrels, who sang a long selection of Christmas carols, terminating with "Hail, makes sense. The real danger with ASATs is not what they can do now to low-flying satellites but what they might do to far more important communi Banning ASAT testing also will help keep research on "star wars" honest. Some "star wars" tests eventually will violate the 1972 ABM treaty that prohibits widespread ballistic missile defenses. But some of those tests will like ASAT tests and because and look much like ASAT tests, and, because satel-lite killers are not covered by the treaty, the "star wars" tests could be explained away as permissible. If neither power is testing ASAT systems, neither can disguise space defense tests as satellite killer tests.

If the only way to continue space tests would be an open break with the ABM treaty, then the logic of negotiating might finally dawn on the White House. The choice would be between continuing a "star wars" program that may never work and breaking a functioning ABM treaty that gives Americans more protection than the Russians.

The Anglo-Irish Accord Will Fail Without U.S. Aid

N EW YORK — The time has come for the United States to contribute to peace and stability in Northern Ireland as it has done so generously and often elsewhere, The Anglo-Irish accord, signed last month, is a historic document. It is, however, short on specifics, and without America's help it may well remain, to paraphrase W.B. Yeats, words, nothing but words.

The accord does not purport to settle the conflict: It would give Dublin a symbolic, advisory role in the affairs of Northern Ireland, but it guarantees nothing and offers no detailed program to end the island's civil strife. It promises no new funds or grants and confers no real power on either the Irish Republic or the ity in the north. Nor does it include any plans to reconstruct the bombed cities of Derry and Belfast.

It does however, represent a politi-cal device through which peace and security may be achieved. The ac-cord's purposefully vague declara-tions of cooperation are all that could be agreed upon now, but it recog-nizes, for the first time, that Dublin has a legitimate right to speak for the Catholic population in the north. This is an important, unprecedented gesture on England's part.

But if these dreams of peace are to become reality, more than fine words and gracious gestures will be neces-sary. Only steady jobs, decent housing and equal access to higher educa-tion — without which there is neither dignity nor personal freedom - will break the barriers of suspicion and paranoia in Northern Ireland. The success of the accord will depend ultimately on concrete changes, paid for with material aid. It is here that America can play an essential role. It is an unflattering fact that America's major role in many international

Egypt. In the same way, the United States ought to be willing to be the silent partner who makes a solution possible in Ireland

There are many precedents for American aid in stabilizing troubled areas. The United States has poured hundreds of millions of dollars into Central America so that democracy might survive terrorism and oppression. Why not do the same in Ireland? It has spent hundreds of millions in Cyprus and Turkey to reconstruct towns destroyed by civil war. Why not in Derry! It has spent more hun-dreds of millions to build a subway system and upgrade transportation in Cairo. Why not in Belfast?

The contrast with Israel is the most striking. America allocates $3.73 hillion a year to Israel, most of it in grants. The usual arguments offered to justify this largesse focus on the strategic significance of Israel and on America's 37-year moral commitment to its survival. But Irish and U.S. ties date back at least three centuries. There are more than 40 million American Irish. It is not in the best interest of America to allow terrorism to flourish in its nearest European neighbor. Yet Ireland receives virtually no U.S. government aid.

tax-exempt charitable contributions and bonds. Other laws permit almost and conds. Other laws permit almost 95 percent of Israel's exports to enter America duty-free. But the American Irish have virtually no way to give tax-free assistance to their homeland. Nor is there any comparable aid to promote Irish exports.

Tax credits and investment guarantees for private American corporaions willing to establish facilities in Northern Ireland could be supple-mented by the United States. If this has been the policy of America elsewhere, why not in Northern Ireland? languages. But accepting contradic-tory interpretations undermines the chances that agreements can endure. This was at the heart of the break-down of detente. Henry Kissinger thought he had tacit Soviet agree-ment to some rules of the road, he thought that the 1972 pledge not to seek "unilateral advantage" over each other meant that the Soviets would stay on their side. For him, it collapsed in Angola, although that was a civil war in which the United States had staked out no better claim to primary influence than Moscow had. The last straw was Afghanistan.

Peace or Destruction?

The keyword in international politics seems to be peace nowadays. Look at all those peace initiatives. The game is to point the finger at the other as the aggressor. The world today abounds in aggression, small and big scale. That makes it easier for the big aggressor to dissimulate his actions. The effort to demask one another as the culprit could escalate into a "declaration of peace." Just think of the efforts made by Messrs.

Calcium's Role as Dietary Mainstay — and Source of Dispute

By Jane E. Brody New York Times Service

ALCIUM, already drawing a great deal of attention for its critical role in preventing the degenerative bone disease osteoporosis, is fast expanding its reputation as an essential part of the diet. At the same time, however, some health experts worry that the value of the nutrient is being overstated and that calcium supplements are being oversold. Long known as the foundation of strong bones and teeth, calcium is emerging in scientific research as possibly protective against high blood pressure and cancer of the colon as well. The typical middleaged American consumes about one-half to two-thirds the recommended 800-milligram daily allowance for calcium, a level many physicians believe is too low.

in a study in The Annals of In-ternal Medicine, Dr. David A. McCarron and Dr. Cynthia D. Morris of Oregon Health Sciences University in Portland reported that 21 of 48 persons with mild to moderate hypertension achieved a significant reduction in blood pressure when given a 1,000-milligram calcium supplement daily for eight

Last July, researchers at the University of Wisconsin in Madison reported in The American Journal of Clinical Nutrition that women with hypertension who took 1,500 milligrams of calcium a day (in addition to medication) for four years had a significant drop in blood pressure, whereas those without the supplement experienced an overall rise in blood pressure. Calcium supplements have also been shown to lower blood pressure in pregnant women and to reduce the risk of eclampsia, a serious disorder of late pregnancy.

And, according to Dr. McCarron, diet-health studies among a random sample of more than 20,000 with hypertension consumed significantly less calcium than those with normal blood pressures.

In most people, however, calcium supplements seem to have no effect on blood pressure. Rather, about a third of those with hypertension are considered likely to be helped by calcium.

As a cancer weapon, calcium supplements were described last month in The New England Journal of Medicine as capable of "quieting" the cancer-prone cells in the colons of people who face a high risk of developing colon cancer. When such people were given daily supplements of 1,250 milli-tering Cancer Center in New York. Just how calcium performs such roles, if in fact it does, is still very much a matter of speculation. With regard to colon cancer, one possible explanation is that calcium binds up bile acids and fatty acids bones, in humans this effect did not that can irritate the colon. Considerably more research is needed before added calcium - either through the diet or supplements can be generally recommended as a preventive or treatment for high blood pressure or colon cancer.

Indeed, it is still not certain that calcium supplements alone can be relied upon to stem the unrelenting loss of bone that seriously afflicts 15 million to 20 million older Americans, causing 1.3 million fractures that cost the United States $3.8 billion in medical care

DOME experts are frankly dis-turbed by what they describe as the "overself" of calcium supplements and the alarm generated by mis-leading advertisements, although they concede that no harm is known to result from taking up to 2,000 milligrams of calcium a day.

Dr. Bruce Ettinger, an endocrinologist at the Kaiser Hospital in

"Up to age 35 or so, high calcium intake may allow the development of a stronger skeleton, which would reduce the risk of osteoporosis when bone loss inevitably occurs later in life, but the findings are equivocal about the benefits of calcium later in life," Dr. Ettinger

Others disagree. Dr. Heaney pointed out, however, that vigorous exercise of osteoporosis for 10 years, believes all types triggered the release of that "calcium is vestly overrated as growth hormone, which in turn stimulated bone formation in people of all ages.

Furthermore, there is increasing evidence that deficiency of the acti-vated form of vitamin D, not calcium per se, is ultimately responsible for much osteoporosis. As people age, not only do they obtain less vitamin D from their diets and bodies become less able to convert the vitamin to its active form, a sorption through the intestinal tract is greatly reduced, especially if the amount of calcium consum

Definitive studies of calcitriol's effectiveness in countering osteoporosis are nearing complet live medical centers and, if the results confirm preliminary findings, the Food and Drug Administration is expected to approve the hormone therapy possibly within a year. The hormone would obviate the need for large doses of calcium and may a normal heart beat, nerve conduction, muscle contraction, enzyme reactions, hormone secretions, celhilar adhesion and blood coagulation. When blood levels of calcium fall too low, fatal convulsive tetany

If inadequate amounts of calcium reach the blood from dictary sources, calcium is removed from the bones to make up the difference. The skeleton can be viewed primarily as a storehouse for calcium, releasing the mineral whenever it is needed for its other life-sustaining functions. Such a store-house became essential when land animals evolved, leaving behind a perpetual bath of calcium-containing seawater. The normal level of from in the blood is the same as that found in seawater, and an elaborate biochemical mechanism has evolved to maintain that blood

DR. Hector DeLuca, a University of Wisconsin biochemist who has done much to muravel this mechanism, and especially the role played by vitamin D, says that cal-citriol, a compound manufactured in the body from cholesterol is perhaps the most potent steroid hormone known. It is prompted into action by parathyroid hor-mone, which is secreted when blood levels of calcium drop below

A substance called vitamin D-3 is formed in the skin when the skin is exposed to ultraviolet light. This same vitamin is found in some foods, primarily fish liver oils and fortified milk products. Vitamin D-3 is inactive unless further pro-cessed. The liver transforms D-3 into calcidiol, the main version of vitamin D found circulating in the blood. When more calcium is needed in the blood, parathyroid hor-mone is released. It stimulates the kidneys to convert calcidiol into calcitriol, or activated vitamin D.

Calcitriol, in turn, acts on three major tissues: It enhances calcium absorption through the intestinal wall, it facilitates removal of calcium from bones and it causes the kidneys to reabsorb more of the 7,000 to 10,000 milligrams of calcium that each day spill into the nrine. The net effect is to raise blood levels of calcium to normal, which completes the cycle by turn-ing off parathyroid hormone. If the amount of calcium available through the intestine (that is, through dietary sources) is not adequate to keep blood levels up, the bones, which serve as a calcium bank, make up for the shortage. When calcium withdrawals are chronic, as they would be in people

£1 Million for New Natterjack Habitat

LONDON (AP) — British Nuclear Fuels says it will spend about £1 million ($1.42 million) to create new breeding grounds for about 500 rare Natterjack toads that live in the path of a planned railroad on the site of the company's complex at Sellafield in the northwest English county of

The company said it would dig new ponds, divert a stream and landscape an area with the toads' favorite soil and plants.

Immune System Affected by Sunlight

EDINBURGH (Reuter) - Sunshine can temporarily lower the body's defenses against disease and unleash latent viruses, according to research ers at Edinburgh University. They said some people were at risk from even brief exposure to sunlight, not enough to cause a sunburn.

A team led by Dr. Mary Norval reported after two years of research that the immune system appeared to be suppressed three to ten days after exposure to the sun. The subjects were vulnerable to new infections and, if they had latent viruses, to eruption of the viruses' symptoms.

Two viruses in particular appeared to be unleashed, Dr. Norval said herpes simplex, which produces cold sores, and papilloma, which produces warts. The project was the first major study combining research into these two viruses and the effects of ultraviolet light.

Heart Disorder Called Unpreventable

EVANSTON, Illinois (WF) — The most common congenital heart disorder, ventricular septal defect, cannot be prevented, aside from good. standard prenatal care to avoid premature birth, a new study concludes. Dr. Thomas B. Newman of the University of California at Sar. Francisco said in an announcement about the study: "Beyond the two definitely known causes of VSD, which are premature birth of the baby and a family history of congenital heart disease, we can find no other risk factors. The incidence of VSD seems to be the same everywhere."

The disorder, in which there is a hole between the two ventricles of the heart, must be corrected with surgery. It occurs in about 3 of every 1,000 births. Dr. Newman reported his findings in the journal Pediatrics.

Early Trauma, Agoraphobia Linked

WASHINGTON (WP) - Major childhood traumas, such as separation from a parent, appear to be one factor that leads to agoraphobia, the fear of open spaces or fear of leaving the house, Italian and Britisl scientists report in the American Journal of Psychiatry.

Comparing two similar groups of 31 adults, the team found the agoraphobics had almost three times as many "major traumatic life events," usually between ages 4 and 15. These included death of a paren or other relative living at home; separation from a parent for at least si months; and divorce or separation of parents.

Cholesterol-Binding Protein Made

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — American and Israeli scientists using genetic engineering say they can manufacture the protein apo-E, which removes cholesterol from the blood, in sufficient quantities to study how the substance works.

Dr. Robert W. Mahley of the University of California in San Francisc said: "Apo-E is very important in cholesterol transport, and yet it i difficult to study because it is found in such small quantities in the plasm of normal humans or animals. We need large concentrations of apo-E to work with to see how it affects cholesterol metabolism."

With larger quantities of apo-E, Dr. Mahley said, scientists can clear the structure of the protein's molecule and might someday create an ap E molecule that would bind cholesterol to its receptors more effective than the natural form does. Dr. Mahley was reporting in the Proceeding of the National Academy of Sciences on work done with Tikva Vogel an

Cheaper Hepatitis-B Shots Are Tried

The president of West Germany Richard von Weizsäcker, urged the Soviet Union Tuesday to release Rudolf Hess, former deputy to Adolf Hitler, the Associated Press reported from Bonn. In his Christmas message, Mr.

Weizsäcker also called on South Africa to free the black activist Nelson Mandela, head of the outlawed African National Congress who has been jailed since 1964. Hess, 91, the last surviving member of Hitler's inner circle, is serv-ing a life sentence in West Berlin's Spandau Prison, where he is the only remaining inmate. The Western victors of World War II - the United States, Britain and France — have expressed will-ingness to free Hess for humanitarian reasons, but the fourth Allied power, the Soviet Union, has blocked his release.

The West German president urged the Russians to "give relief to the very sick" physicist Andrei D. Sakharov, the Nobel laureate who has been exiled to the city of Gorky for his dissident activity.

Mr. Weizsäcker acknowledged that Hess was "truly no champion of human rights or freedom."

"But Hess has been serving a Mr. Peres said that since last sentence 44 years now," he said, taking into account Hess's wartime mment in Britain.

In London, meanwhile, Queen Hizabeth II said tragic events in 1985, including plane crashes, earthquakes, famine, volcano eruptions and acts of terrorism, should not obscure the "bravery and self-'sacrifice" of people who help mankind every day.

End-of-the-Year Strategies Offer Some Loss Protection

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN

New York Times Service

EW YORK - In the four trading days remaining this year, stock market investors still have time to consider a variety of tax strategies. Losses may be established for income-tax purposes in 1985 by selling before the closing bell on Tuesday, Dec. 31, since the U.S. Tax Code states that such losses are recognized on the date of sale. Losses often are taken to offset gains and thereby reduce tax liability. On the other hand, investors who sell stocks at a profit during the final five days of the year have the choice of declaring these

"Another way to protect the gain ... is to write, or sell, a call option on the stock."

gains either on their 1985 or 1986 tax form, depending upon which year appears most heneficial.

"Gains are generally not recognized for tax purposes until the investor receives the proceeds of the sale," Standard & Poor's Outlook said. "If you sell at a gain in the last five trading days of 1985, the trade does not settle until 1986. In such a case, according to Internal Revenue Service rules, you have made an installment sale and the gain is subject to tax in the following year. However, a taxpayer who elects not to report the sale on the installment method should include the gain in 1985

One advantage of postponing a gain until 1986 involves what economists call "the time value of money." In simple terms, this means that people can enjoy funds otherwise used for tax payments for an additional period.

Certain strategies also exist for "locking in" profits made this year and, at the same time, postpone reporting of the gain until 1986.

Some brokers report that many clients are using this approach, since many have substantial gains in the soaring stock market of recent months. Such a tactic is especially appealing to clients who are fearful of seeing their gains erode next year if stock prices

HE time-honored technique for locking in such gains is called "shorting against the box." The box in this instance refers to the safe deposit box, or account, of the short seller. Although a short sale of this type may be used to carry over a profit from one year to the next, it cannot change any shortterm gains into long-term gains. The holding period for long-term capital gains is a minimum of six months and a day.

For example, a person may have purchased 200 shares of a stock at $30 in September before the market began its spectacular rally. The price of the stock by now may have climbed to $50. This gives the stockholder a "paper profit" of $4,000, less

In order to realize this profit, but not report it as taxable income until 1986, the investor can sell short 200 shares of borrowed stock at $50. The price the investor ultimately receives - in this case, $50 a share - effectively is set at the time of the short sale. Then, next year, the holder can realize this price when he instructs his broker to deliver the "long" position, or the stock held in the box, against the short sale. In the process, both the long and short positions are closed out.

Certain option-related techniques also can be used to protect a gain while postponing the reporting of the gain until 1986, (Continued on Page 11, Col. 3)

By Steve Lohr New York Times Service LONDON - in his oak-paneled office adorned with Victorian prints of gentlemen hunting and fishing Somerset Gibbs complained good-naturedly about the boom times in his trade: head-hunting for clients in the City of London, Britain's

The problem for headhunters now," he said, grinning, "is that there's too much business."

Head-hunting - the recruitment of personnel, especially at the executive level — has changed not only in its volume, but in its manner, said Mr. Gibbs, a 59year-old former senior partner in a London brokerage house.

For years, job-hopping in this square-mile (2.6 square-kilometer) City was conducted by unwritten rules of civility. Anyone who wanted to leave a company practically had to ask his boss for

"But now it's all rough and tough and there are lawyers larking in the background," Mr. Gibbs said. "The old boys club is disappearing very rapidly."

Indeed, the shake-up now un-

The deregulation will peak next October with what is referred to here as the "Rig Bang." Fixed charges on securities trad-ing will be abandoned in favor of negotiated commissions, a step that Wall Street took in 1975.

"Anybody who says he knows what will happen in October 1986 is lying," says Paul Neild, a senior director of Phillips & Drew, a big London brokerage. "And six months after that, anyone who says he knows the shape things will be in is also lying."

The shift in London is being watched with great interest, and not just in the offices that are expanding around the City. De-regulation in London, Europe's eading financial center, is forcing change on the Continent and may have even a more critical impact on Wall Street.

Brokerages and American commercial banks have been scrambling to buy stakes in Brit-ish companies as London has become an increasingly important leg in the tripod of international iness with New York and To-last year in global equity trading, which stocks of some companies are traded almost continuously around-the-clock, have led American brokerages to want more of a presence in the City. Deregulation in London also will allow American commercial banks, to sharpen their skills in the securities markets as they await the possible repeal of the Glass-Steagall Act, which bars banks in the United States from most of the securities business. The opening of the London arket, which has been pushed by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government, is intended to break up the cozy but increasingly uncompetitive club that has dominated the London financial markets. The shakeout will transform the City from a cottage industry (Continued on Page 11, Col. 4)

India to Buy 21 Helicopters From Westland

NEW DELHI — India has decided to buy 21 helicopters from Britain's troubled Westland company, which is at the center of a takeover battle, and another 21 from nationally owned Aerospatiale of France, a government official has said.

W. Landy

The decision involves Westland's W-30 Westland helicopters and the French group's Damphin helicop-ters. Jagdish Tytler, the minister for civil aviation, was quoted Tuesday by the Press Trust of India as saying they would be used for oil exploration and passenger service.

The offers have been at the heart of a bitter ministerial dispute in Britain, Leon Brittan, the trade and industry minister, backed the Westland board's initial decision to accept the Sikorsky-Fiat offer, while the defense secretary, Michael Heseltine, supports the Euro-can solution. Discussions between Britain and India had continued for two years, although any possible sale at times seemed jeopardized by frosty rela-tions between the two countries. India complained that the British government had not taken a tough stand on some Londonbased Sikh extremists preaching secessionism and terrorism in India. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain discussed the helicopter sale when she visited India last April and when Prime Min-ister Rajiv Gandhi of India visited Britain in October. Mr. Gandhi told the Indian Parliament in May that Britain had threatened to cut its development aid to India by £45 million because of India's refusal to buy the helicopters costing about £65 million, Mr. Gandhi, who is a pilot, also said in May that the helicopters

Mr. Tytler said that the fleet has 42 helicopters would begin operating next October. (AFP, AP

India Cracks Down on Its Huge 'Black Economy'

U.K. Reports Decline Of Oil Production In the North Sea

LONDON — Oil output from the U.K. sector of the North Sea fell in November from the levels recorded in October, according to the Royal Bank of Scotland PLC.

dropped to 161.6, a fall of 5.5 points from the evel of October, when production came close to the record levels of January. Last month's index figure, which was down I percent from the level of November 1984, represented an average daily output of 2.66 million barrels of crude oil. The bank said Tuesday that production was

GM Said to Ready Financing Plan

By John Holusha
New York Times Service
DETROIT — General Motors Corp. will ofter 7.9-percent financing on some cars beginning on Thursday as an incentive to increase flagging sales, according to auto industry sources.

Several GM dealers said the incentives would be offered on about half the automobile giant's product of GM's venture with Toyota Motor Corp. The program is expected to extend through February.

If there was any surprise in the GM plan, it was the attention the campaign will draw to the slow-selling Nova, a key part of GM's effort to bold on the statement of the wall on the statement of the same of the control of the control of the same of the control of the control of the same of the control of the contro hold on to part of the small car market through various alliances with Japanese car makers. Auto industry analysts had been predicting that GM would be forced to offer some form of incentives to clean out stocks of unsold vehicles if it hoped to meet its ambitious first-quarter production schedule.

There was no comment from GM on the predicted action, nor any response from the other auto companies in Detroit, which are closed for Christmas.

More than one million GM cars have piled up in dealers' lots as November and December sales shumped after the expiration of a 7.7-percent financing campaign in October. Dealers have an 85-day supply of cars, well above the 60 days' supply considered normal.

Chrysler Corp. currently has an 8.6-percent financing rate, or rebates of $500 to $1,000, in effect for most of its smaller and midsize cars.

Ford Motor Co. is offering 7.9-percent fi-nancing on its subcompact Escort, Lynx and EXP models, and the program is due to expire Jan. 2. However, if past practice is any guide, Ford will be forced to respond to GM's incen-tives to avoid losing market share.

The "same thing." Mr. Nano said, means treating workers with dignity and making use of their brains as well as their bodies.

Primarily under the management of former Toyota officials, the 3.1 million-square-foot (280,000 square-meter) Fremont plant is serving as a laboratory for several experiments in labor relations. Among innovations for a U.S. factory is the deep involvement of workers in quality control. "The Japanese have shown great patience," Mr. Warren said, "and a great deal of effort goes into training and dealing with errors: the willingness not just to repair a damaged part but to stop at that point and go back and determine what caused that damage and take union's regional director in Fremont, lauded the company's demand for quality from its suppliers as well as its workers.

Mr. Nano noted that glass with imperfections that GM had previously accepted had been sent back to a long-term supplier.

Still, problems luck under the surface. Some workers feel that the assembly line moves too fast. They say that union representatives, many of whom spent two years memployed or bouncing from one low-paid job to another after GM shut the Fremont plant, are unwilling to push the issue because they fear that the venture will fail and they will be out in the streets again.

"We don't have time to inspect any more. We glance," said Richard Aguilar, an inspector on the assembly line. They work us like we're robots. These people saying the plant is great haven't worked on the assembly line." Similarly, some labor analysts say the union's increased role in quality control has diminished its ability to represent workers aggressively on the shop floor.

"I don't think it's possible to be responsible for defending workers

But Mr. Ephlin said he considered that the union can shoulder both responsibilities.

"Our first role must be representing the people, protecting their contractual rights," he said. "But at the same time we must represe the total work force by making the plant a success, a viable and competitive one. Mr. Smith acknowledged the concerns about line speed and said it probably would be crucial to the estion of whether harmonious labor relations are maintained. ing off any hourly employee to re-duce the salaries of officers and management staff and to restore to the bargaining unit any work that has been contracted out. This is unprecedented in the U.S. auto industry, as is NUMMI's agreement "that it will not lay off employees unless compelled to do so by severe economic conditions that threaten the long-term financial viability of the company." . In return, the union surrendered 80 job classifications, traditionally considered by the union a mechanism to guarantee job securi-ty, but considered by management an encumbrance to operating flexibility. At NUMMI, all production workers are in one job classification and skilled trades workers are divided into only three categories.

Part of the debate over the raids is the question of whether they will have any lasting effect. Some ex-perts point out that raids had been increased in the past, and that these were followed by a resumption of the old activities.

One decade ago, the marginal income tax rate in India was as high as 75 percent. Mr. Gandhi lowered it this year to 50 percent, from 62 percent, and there is talk it could go down to 40 percent as early as next year. Corporate taxes, licensing requirements and regulations also have been cut.

In interviews, several business men said they detected some change in business attitudes toward taxes, but that it was too early to say if the change would be perma-

Prices in Brazil Up 234% in '85

RIO DE JANEIRO - Inflation in Brazil reached a record 233.7 percent this year as consumer prices increased 13.4 percent in December, according to statistics released Tuesday by the Planning Ministry.

The previous inflation record, 208.8 percent, was set in 1984. Most of the upward pressure this year came from the prices of agricultural products, which increased 280 percent. An index used by the indeoendent Getulio Vargas Foundation also is expected to show an inflation rate of more than 230 percent for 1985, sources in the organization said. End-of-Year

Although economic logic is the underpinning for the market opening, the City of London is a unbulent, anxiety-ridden place these days. Many view the the prepara-tions for wholesale deregulation as speculation because of uncertainty about the brave new world that the City will enter with the "Big Bang."

Alan Morgan, a partner of McKinsey & Co., sees evidence of a broader breakdown in the traditional "village culture" of the City.

"The gentleman's agreement approach was seen to be increasingly out of step with what's happen in the international capital markets and with business realities," he

With new firms arriving and trading expected to rise after the Big Bang, office space in London's financial district has become scarce and expensive.

A consortium led by Credit Suisse-First Boston and Morgan Stanley is planning to build a "sec-ond City" two miles away in an undeveloped dock area on the Thames River called the Isle of Dogs.

In Britain, the opening up of the capital markets has increased op-portunities and competition for all the players in the financial markets. Institutional investors, for example, are now far more aggressive in seeking quick profits and are will-ing to sell their shares more often.

Another byproduct is the recent rash of hostile takeovers in Britain. Institutional shareholders who were once loyal to management are becoming less and less so. Their role is critical because they own more than two-thirds of British stock and so-called jobbing firms executed the trades. Because the fees collected at each stage of a transaction increased costs to the investors, trading in British equities slipped overseas to more efficient markets. Today, the shares of some big English companies are traded more actively on Wall Street than on the London

Stock Exchange.

The Thatcher government recognized that the globalization of financial markets was an irresistible force. It reasoned that without deregulation, the City of London, hailed as Britain's "fringe of pros-perity," might become just another declining English industry. Britain already had a striking ex-

Because such combinations are taboo in the United States, American banks such as Chase and Citibank are coming to London to test the waters.

"Getting rid of fixed commissions in the U.S. was a relatively minor development compared to what is going on here," said John M. Hennessy, chief executive of Credit Suisse-First Boston Ltd.

Much of what happens in Lon-don depends on how active the markets are as the deregulation goes completely into effect late next year. If a worldwide deflation takes place, the assumption that thinner margins will be offset by

Shake-Up Brings Faster Pace, Soaring Pay to London Market Another major question is the degree of impact that the big international concerns, especially the American banks and securities houses, will have on the market. The consensus seems to be that the adjustment will come in two stages. First, a shakeout will follow the consolidation that is now under way and probably will last for the next two to three years. Second, the new firms that emerge will focus their efforts with leaders developing in such areas as stock trading and dealing in British government securities or "gilts."

Ultimately, the theory that unregulated markets generate greater wealth and employment should hold, most securities executives say. "But the road to that higher ground," one London investment banker said, "will be littered with bodies."

How many of the winners will be British is another question. As the market is internationalized, some City firms will find it difficult to compete, especially with the capi-tal-rich American securities houses. In merchant banking, for example, the roughly 15 firms may be weeded down to three or four, bankers say. The strongest appear to be S.G. Warburg, Kleinword Benson and Morgan Grenfell.

Yet there is some doubt about how significant the U.S. companies

While the new environment will force British firms to fight for survival, the stakes will be far lower for U.S. firms, From a Wall Street erspective, the amount of money to be made in London may not be great because the market is much

The total capitalization of the London market is $290 billion, compared with $1.7 trillion in New York. That means the United States holds 50 percent of the world equity market while Britain holds only 9 percent. But for the American firms, the reasons for enlarging operations in London go beyond an effort to make a dent in quarterly profits.

"London is the center of the international equities market now," said Norman Lawrence, senior vice president of Shearson Lehman

FDR: THE NEW YORK YEARS 1928-1933

By Kenneth S. Davis. 512 pages. $19.95. Random House, 201 East 50th Street, New York, N. Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Walter Goodman

THE subtitle of Kenneth S. Davis's second I volume of biography of Franklin Delano Roosevelt might be "The Composition of a President." Davis presents Roosevelt in his mid-40s as an unfinished man, possessed of surpassing charm, immense physical courage and instinctive political savvy. But he seemed wanting in commitment to any cause but his own and had little comprehension of the ideological depths into which he was being drawn.

Roosevelt's split political personality, be-tween expediency and reform, is a main theme of "The New York Years 1928-1933." The split was personified by his advisers. Some of them, such as Louis Howe, James Farley and Sam Rosenman, were primarily loyal to the man; others, including Raymond Moley, Rexford Tugwell and Adolf Berle, early members of his "brain trust," were churning out notions for transforming the economy and shaking the power of the big corporations.

Looking ahead to the presidency at an hour of worldwide depression, the potential candidate was confronted with urgent global issues that divided his party — the tariff, the gold standard, the League of Nations. At home, there were farm disasters, bank failures, crushing unemployment and a spreading mistrust of the system. On these and other momentous matters, Roosevelt moved so cautiously that his brain trusters sometimes despaired.

Intellectuals grew somewhat scornful of the governor, and leaders of the left became mistrustful. Although Walter Lippmann supported his election in 1932, it was in a condesc ing spirit. Norman Thomas saw Roosevelt as personally responsible for the Socialist Party's failure to win more than 3 percent of the vote that year despite the Depression; the new president was a portent of the taming of American radicalism. He dragged his feet until attention to the "forgotten man" became good politics, but when he did act, it was always with high spirits and often with dramatic force.

The New York Years' is generally readable, despite a few journalistic tics of this sort:

"short, thin, sharp-faced, sharp-eyed Band O'Connor"; "stocky, broad-faced, methodical to industrious Sam Rosenman." And the final few lines, where Davis pulls out all the stops make one wonder what his editor was doing:

"Farley listened, deeply moved, even ave-struck. The man beside him shone with an inward light. "And outside the train windows was night.

"Deep, dark, wintry night . . . Such organ music does the book a disservice. Davis is no hagiographer. He is an assidous researcher, a fair-minded analyst and, when not trying too hard, an inviting chronicles.

Arco Has Offered to Settle U.S. Price-Control Charges

LOS ANGELES - Atlantic Richfield Co. has offered to pay $225 million to settle U.S. Energy Department charges that the oil company violated federal price controls from the early 1970s to January 1981, the company has dis-closed.

In October, the Economic Regulatory Administration of the Energy Department said that Arco owed $239.9 million in overcharges and $259.3 million in interest relationships and the said that the said ed to oil trades with smaller compa-nies. The charges totaled $499.2

The smaller companies included Marc Rich & Co., the Swiss-based commodity trading concern, which pleaded guilty in October 1984 to violating federal price controls and other charges and paid a fine of $150 million. Arco's proposed settlement, which was disclosed Tuesday through a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, stated that the company would reduce its fourth-quarter pretax earnings by $225 million or by the amount of any settlement reached with the de-

A spokesman for Arco said the department had not responded to the company's offer. The spokes-man declined to say whether Arco had admitted or denied any wrongdoing "We feel this is a fair settle-ment," the spokesman said. A spokesman for the Energy Department said that the case still was in litigation and declined to discuss any details.

Wall Street analysts said that the proposed settlement, when com-bined with the $1.5-billion charges price controls and asked for $509 from the company's major restructuring begin in April, would bring Ashley, a spokesman for Occiden-Arco a loss of slightly more than tal, said that the case was still pend-$100 million for the year. If the agreement is reached, the yearly loss will be the first ever for Arco.

Despite the size of the loss, analysts said the company has strong operating profits and seems to be in good health because of the inge restructuring. "Price-control allegations tend to be complicated, and the controls themselves were ambiguous," Joel D. Fischer, an analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. said. "This will technically controls the property of the controls of the controls of the controls of the controls of the controls." Inc., said. This will technically go down as a loss, but the market is focusing more on the company's operating earnings. Their opera-tions are still very profitable."

Arco's stock closed at $61.50 Tuesday, down 50 cents on the New York Stock Exchange.

Under the price control program, which was dropped in 1981. companies with access to lowpriced supplies of crude oil were required to make payments to companies without access to such supplies. The controls held the prices to an average of about $7 a barrel at a time when uncontrolled oil of the same grade sold for about $30 a

The allegations against Arco are part of a larger investigation by the Energy Department. In a similar action in March, the department channel the Cities Service Oil and charged the Cities Service Oil and Gas Cosp. with violating price controls between 1979 and 1981.

Cities Services, which was acquired by the Occidental Petroleum Corp. for $4 billion in 1982, denied the charges and said it would appeal the case. The government said that Cities Services overcharged for 13 million barrels of oil million in fines and interest. Frank

Three adolescents, in fact, bearing rare soccer gifts and a simple message: that flair still exists, still transcends the self-sold obsession we have that children are lost in sports unless immersed in coaching from the cradle.

In 1983, Chen Ha Van Hoo, having reached 14 — the age of legal consent for a schoolboy to sign with a British professional team - joined Manchester City.

In 1984, Everton, en route to the English championship, won a race to obtain a pledge that Diep Van Lee, another 14-year-old, would play for it.

And now Hung Quoe Dang, just 13 and therefore only surreptitionsly on the run from agents and recruiters, has been chosen from among 10,000 aspirants for a Bobby Charlton

So has any youngster whose precocious flair may or may not blossom; 75 percent of those who sign up as schoolboys fail to earn a living in soccer. Fulfilling the promise of youth is difficult enough. Soccer adds the demands of sus-

Nancy Cannot Tell a Lie

WASHINGTON — The Great Lie Detector Test Flap has come to an end. When President Reagan signed a directive ordering thousands of government officials to hook up to a polygraph machine, Secretary of State George Shultz balked, and announced he would

The president then backed down and said the lie detector would be used only in special cases.

What nobody knows is that it wasn't George Shultz who was responsible for getting Reagan to rethink his security plan. It was Nancy Reagan. Three days after the president signed the directive, two men Buchwald

Reagan's sitting room and attempted to place electrodes on her head.

Mrs. Reagan said, "What are you doing?"

One of the men replied, "The president has ordered everyone to take a polygraph test. We wanted to get the White House people out of the way first."

"Leave immediately. I will never submit to a polygraph test." "Gee, Mrs. Reagan. It isn't a big deal to take one if you have nothing to hide, But it's going to make everyone wonder about you if you refuse."

PEN Congress Set Jan. 12-18 in N.Y.

New York Times Service N EW YORK — The 48th International PEN Congress, which runs here Jan. 12-18, will be the first such meeting in the United States in 20 years and perhaps the largest gathering ever of foreign writers on U.S. shores.

The congress is expected to be attended by 400 American writers and 275 foreign writers. The theme of the congress is "The Writer's Imagination and the Imagination

The gathering will consist of more than 30 events plus parties and receptions. Foreign guests of honor are expected to include Gunter Grass and Eugene Ionesco.

"I'm going to speak to the presi-dent about this."

"Nancy, why are you getting your hair done so early?"

These are not hair curlers. Ronnie. They are electrodes for a polygraph test. Will you please tell me why I have to submit to one?"

"I can't very well ask George Shultz to take the test if I won't ask my own wife."

"Ronnie, have I ever lied to уоц?" "Of course not. That's why I wasn't afraid to O.K. the polygraph for you. I knew you would pass with flying colors. Can't you see the headlines? 'Nancy Reagan Tells Truth Again.

There is no reason to take a test, I don't know any state secrets." That's the point, Nancy. If you did know any secrets the threat of a lie detector test would make you think twice before you passed them

Ronnie, why are you making everyone do this?"

"Bill Casey and Cap Weinberger think it's a dandy idea. They believe the test will have a chilling effect on would-be traitors." "Am I considered a would-be traitor?" Of course not I know it and you know it, but how can I prove it to everyone else if I can't produce the results of your polygraph "Everyone says lie detector tests are no good. They can't even be used in court as evidence. And they violate people's civil rights." "I have done more for civil rights than any president in the past 50 years. Let me read you a letter I received from a little girl in Iowa."

"Ronnie, I want those men out of the boudoir in two minutes." "Nancy, you are the crown jewel in my administration's polygraph program. We'll make the questions very simple, such as why did you exile our dog Lucky to the ranch in California?

"I've never hesitated to cooperate with you before, Ronnie. But this time the answer is NO."

"Since you feel that strongly about it, I'll cancel the lie detector program. But when the next com-mie spy surfaces in the government, you'll have nobody to blame but George Shuitz and yourself."

Trump's New Towers: Grandiose but Inhuman

By Paul Goldberger New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Not since Philip Johnson and John Burgee's plan for the AT&T building in 1978 has an unbuilt project been as talked about as Donald Trump's proposal to put a 150-story condominium tower on Manhattan's Upper West Side.

The tower, which would be the centerpiece of Television City, an apartment, office and studio complex designed for Trump by the architect Helmut Jahn, has made the network news, numerous na-tional magazines and a lot of the international press - not bad for a project that is years away from being built, if it gets built at all.

All this publicity is precisely what Trump has been banking on. The world loves drama and power and sex appeal, and the plan to build the world's tallest building sesses all three.

But Trump does not, I think, have any realistic expectation that he will be able to start construction on this 2,600-unit tower with-in the near future, and I wonder, despite all the hoopla, how much be really intends to build this supertall tower, even if he can overcome the political opposition that on the Upper West Side is inevitable with so large a building.

While a building this tall is structurally and technologically possible, and has been so for many years, it makes little economic or social sense. It is extraordinarily expensive and inef-ficient to build — so elaborate a structural framework is necessary and so much space must be devoted to elevators that such a tower can never meet any conventional economic standards.

It can be justified as a symbol, and as such it does have the ability to hold sway over the imagina-tion. The tallest building in the world! It is not surprising that this potential building has taken on the aura, especially given that it would be taller by hundreds of feet than the 110-story Sears Tower in Chicago, the current record

When all the excitement fades, however, how practical is such a tower in a functional sense? Even if the economic problems could be put aside, does anyone really want to live 150 stories in the air in a building with 2,599 other agartments?

EMPLOYMENT

GENERAL POSITIONS WANTED

Donald Trump with drawings of his Television City, which includes 150-story centerpiece, six "smaller" towers and a high-rise office building (far right).

Trump assumes that the novelty of being able to say you live in the tallest skyscraper in the world will be enough to sell apartments, but at the 95-story John Hancock Tower in Chicago, which contains what are now the world's highest apartments, the units on the topmost floors are not the most pop-ular. They sway in the wind, they are a much longer elevator trip from the ground and, most troubling for some people, it is often impossible to tell the weather on the street. And the view, while spectacular on a clear day, is more likely to be blocked by haze than are the views of neighbors 20 or 30 stories below. In essence, there is little to this idea except its appeal as a symbol. And while Jahn's design is only schematic at this point, there is nothing in the futuristic, threesided shape he has devised so far that seeins to connect the building more closely to the city around it.

Trump's main purpose in pro-posing this 150-story tower has probably been well served already — people all over the world are talking about the Television City project. A likely second purpose emerges from the first, and is equally connected with image: By proposing to make a 150-story tower the centerpiece of his project, Trump has deflected attention from the fact that the rest of the project includes six 76-story apartment towers, which, by comparison to the central building, Right now there is no apartment tower anywhere in New York that rises this high. Trump is proposing to build six of them. Yet he has managed, by virtue of juxtaposing these six towers with the world's tallest building to make them seem small, causing observers to refer to these otherwise huge towers as the "little buildings.

The rest of the project seems to be what Trump is most serious about building. The overall plan is simple and straightforward: Most of the huge site from 59th Street to 72d Street, which once contained the Pennsylvania Railroad's train yards, would be decked over with a three-level platform that would have parking, a retail shopping center at the north end, television studio space at the south end and a park on the top level. The towers — including a 65-story office building would be lined up at the eastern edge of the park.

While the platform makes considerable sense - it is really the best way to deal with the complexities of the old rail yard and the elevated West Side Highway, platform is mainly the kind of planning that ought to have been left behind a generation ago. Putting huge towers in open space, with little connection to the varied pattern of streets, smaller spaces and different building types of the real city, is to see the city only as an abstraction.

For some enlightenment about what this project might be like, look at one of Chicago's notable buildings, Lake Point Tower, a 70-story apartment building of curving glass set on a stone base. Inspired by an unbuilt design of Mies van der Rohe, it is stunningly beautiful from afar: from close up, however, Lake Point Tower turns out to be a kind of vertical island, a sealed object cut off from any connection to the city Jahn's preliminary studies for the bases of the Television City towers suggest that these will be slightly better than Lake Point Tower. But the problem is inherent in any scheme of 76-story towers set in open space — its fundamental abstraction is antithetical to the elements that make a city truly a city, not merely a collection of tall buildings.

The challenge is to make the connections that turn a complex into something that possesses genuine urban qualities and is not simply an array of big buildings side by side. The one large project that has succeeded at doing this is Battery Park City in lower Manhattan, which under its new master plan by Cooper Eckstut has begun to evolve into an ideal example of large-scale development. The present Battery Park City plan evolved slowly, only after the failure of several earlier master plans - which bore considerable resemblance to the flamboyant and overreaching Television City plan — became apparent, Battery Park City's lessons, learned through hard experience.

were that such a never-never land of big and glittering towers standing amid nothing doesn't really work. The saddest thing about Television City is that its sponsors seem to have picked up so little of the knowledge of cities and urban design gained in the last genera-tion. To look at Television City is to think that the experience of the which runs along the western edge of the site — what is atop the last 20 years in architecture had not happened at all.

Our exclusively-designed leather pocket diary is thin, flat and elegant.

Tabbed address section

-Rich dark leather

No sooner was it introduced than everybody wanted one!

The International Herald Tribune diary, started as a distinctive Christmas present for a few of our friends, was such a huge success that now we make it available to all our readers.

This ingeniously designed diary is flat as can be -neat and luxurious -including a builtin note pad. Slips into your pocket without a bulge and is ready with instant "jotting" paper the second you need it. Personalized with your initials (up to 3) at no extra cost. The perfect Christmas gift for almost anyone... including yourself.

-Note paper sheets are fitted on the back of the diary—a simple pull removes top sheet. - No curled up edges. No torn pages. -Comes with note paper refills.

PLUS: Pages of useful information. Conversion tables of weights, measures and distances, a list of This handy national holidays by note pad country, vintage chart is terrifica and other facts_all in this incredibly flat little book. Herald Eribus
